Archetypal Ritual: Hungering for the Sacred in Human Psychology

Presented by Maggi D. Colwell, MS,
ATR-BC, LPAT

Archetypal Ritual: Hungering for the Sacred in Human Psychology will explore the nature of ritual as an aspect that has been woven into the fabric of human experience since prehistory. Long before language gave us doctrine, ritual gave us a form of a psychological container for what could not be spoken. In this containment, culture keeps terror and death anxiety at bay. In this workshop, licensed art therapist and Jungian analyst-in-training Maggi Colwell explores the archetypal psychological structures that underlie ritual behavior across cultures and across time and considers what the hunger for ritual reveals about the human psyche today.

Participants will be guided through experiential reflective exercises designed to illuminate the psychological function of ritual from inside out. The workshop concludes with a discussion of how ritual-informed perspectives can deepen clinical work in depth psychology, art therapy, and psychotherapy.

About Our Presenter

Maggi Colwell, MS, ATR-BC-LPAT, is a licensed art therapist in Ohio, Delaware, and New York and a board-certified art therapist. They are a Diploma Candidate at the C.G. Jung Institute Zurich. Maggi trained with the Assisi Institute and holds a Dream Pattern Certificate. Furthermore, Maggi's teaching is informed by living knowledge of ceremony and ritual from 12 years of ritual training from the Assembly of the Sacred Wheel. They obtained legal clergy status in the state of Delaware in 2011. Their private practice, Chiron Art Therapy, is depth-oriented and draws on Jungian theory, dream analysis, active imagination, art therapy, and embodiment work where Maggi works mainly with middle-aged women for issues such as complicated grief, childhood trauma, and chronic illness.
